A Century-Old Family Tradition

Horses have been a part of Stanley Park, the jewel of Vancouver for well over a century.

At first, the miners and loggers used them for hauling and clearing trails. In fact, some of the parks existing trails were cleared by logging companies. Not long after the park was dedicated in 1889, a gentler use for horses began.

A century later, the clip-clop of horses still echoes in the park. The trams (horse-drawn carriages) today are designed with the comfort of the horses in mind, using a freestanding tongue and aluminum frame. They have some features the old Tally-Ho drivers would find astonishing, including signal lights and hydraulic brakes.

But one thing hasn't changed, these are still 'organically powered' vehicles, running on hay and oats: a fun, environmentally friendly way to see the jewel of Vancouver.

Easy to get to...

Drive... from downtown Vancouver

735 Stanley Park Drive. Enter Stanley Park from Georgia Street. At the roundabout (traffic circle) take the first right hand turn. Park in the first parking lot on the left hand side. At the lowest part of the parking lot is the information booth. The Horse-Drawn Tour kiosk is located just before that booth on the left side of the road.

GPS Coordinates: North Latitude: 49.29796 degrees, West Longitude: 123.13063 degrees. NAD(83) Datum. The closest intersection to the entrance to the park is Georgia Street & Denman Street.

Public Transit... from downtown Vancouver

Catch the "# 19 Stanley Park" bus on Pender Street at Granville. Disembark at the first stop in the park (just before the roundabout) at the foot of Pipeline Road.
